Content:

This highly-engaging workshop explores how the brain actually learns and provides you with practical tools to meet the specific challenges you face daily in your school and classroom. You will discover what is happening in the brains of your unique learners and the latest research on topics such as: ADHD/ADD, autism, attention, memory formation and recall, and more. You will understand the brain's emotional system and why, for some, certain emotions pose a big threat to their learning.

Liesl McConchie is a former teacher, including a teacher of special education math. She has worked with teachers and schools all over the world to bridge the critical knowledge from cognitive neuroscience with practical classroom applications. As an educator, and mother of a unique learner, Liesl will share powerful information and tools to help you succeed every day with your students. Join Liesl for an informative and inspiring day of learning that will rekindle your passion for teaching and fill your tool box with useful strategies to help you boost student achievement.
